

October 4 – Saco, ME

It was sunny but a little chilly, in the mid-50s. We decided to explore another of Portland's parks. We followed a trail that goes along the coast. It was nice to see so many people out walking, biking, and running, just enjoying the park. The coastline is rocky, more like what I expected.

There were two large cruise ships docked in Portland, apparently prior to covid, there were few cruise ships seen in the bay and still it made the news that 2 were parked in the bay. The ships are so big, the city was hidden from our view.

We scouted out a couple of places we wanted to dine, however, with the thousands of tourists brought in via cruise ship, we decided to try another day.

Happy birthday Mom. Miss you a lot.
